Fintech and The Law:

How Technology is Reshaping Law

Based on the book 'Fintech and The Law: a guide' (with Oxford University Press, work in progress, publication date 2023)

Society is facing unprecedented events and the past twenty years, in particular, have seen exponential growth in the way disruptive technology has significantly improved processes and services. Financial services are one of the most affected by these innovations, suffering a very substantial transformation in the way they operate and are regulated. Fintech has arrived and it is going to stay for as long as data is deemed as a 'commodity' and brilliant minds continue to develop algorithms and applications for the new technologically savvy customer.

The law has also reached a junction and now feels the excruciating need to evolve and adapt at a very high pace, more or less in line with technological advances. Lawyers need to be ready and acquire the fundamental knowledge to advise and defend clients' rights and seek indemnities when those are unobserved.

Discussants:

Nadia Coggiola (Associate Professor in Civil Law, Scuola di Management ed Economia, Università di Torino)

Laura Zoboli (Assistant Professor in European Economic Law, University of Warsaw - Early Career Fellow - Dipartimento di Eccellenza, Università di Torino)
